Readers Respond!

Should President Trump Be Impeached?

In last week's Readers Respond, we asked the brilliant political minds of our faithful young readers: Should President Trump be impeached? Here is how YOU responded.

Abigail, Age 7: My mom told me to say that Trump should be impeached, but not to tell Dad that she said that.

Brendan, Age 8: My sister told me that Trump hates girls because they have cooties! Yuck!

John, Age 6: My dad says that if we don't have a wall, all the browns will come in. I agree, because brown is a bit icky of a color, and my favorite color is green.

José, Age 7: Billy told me on the playground that Trump will make me go back to where I came from. I don't want to go back to New Jersey!

Isabella, Age 6: My uncle said that if Trump is impeached the gays will make us burn in hell. What is a gay?

Your Turn: We want YOU to answer this question for next week's issue: What's the solution to the Israel/Palestine conflict? Send your responses to us to be in next week's issue!

10 FUN FACTS ABOUT LSD!

By Daniel Carr

Hi Science Kids, it's me, Stan the Chemistry Man! Once again, I'm here to teach you something new about the wonders of science! Last week, we focused on the effects of depression on the brain, and today we'll continue with that neurological theme by talking about LSD! Despite the reports that I have been struggling through personal issues, I assure all of my loyal readers that I am always ready to explore the wonders of science with you!

LSD stands for Lysergic Acid Diethylamide! Next time you are taking LSD, you can tell everyone what it actually stands for, and impress all of your friends and your ex-wife!

!HEAVY DOSE!

The chemical formula for LSD is C<sub>20</sub>H<sub>25</sub>N<sub>3</sub>O! That's a long formula! Almost as long as the commitment that my wife promised me 3 years ago when we walked down the aisle!

!HEAVY DOSE!

LSD is a psychedelic! This means that, when you take LSD, you can escape the cruel realities of the world. In happy LSD world, your wife never left you for your brother!

!HEAVY DOSE!

LSD is a synthetic drug! This means that LSD can't be found in nature, and is a man-made creation! That means that you can make it in your garage all by yourself! No parent needs to find out what you're doing in the garage! Just tell them it's science!

!MEGA DOSE!

LSD can be ingested really easily! Unlike opioids like heroin, with which you need a needle, LSD can be taken through a tablet, so all you really need is a mouth! My ex-wife and her overactive mouth, for example, could take LSD rather easily! You can do it while you're writing an article about science! Especially if your heart is totally broken!

!MEGA DOSE!

There's a Dragon in my Kitchen! How did he get in there???? WoOoOoOoO

!MEGA DOSE!

7.

The floor is made out of Jell-O! I'm floating and bouncing up and down on a magic carpet ride made out of sticky yummy Jell-O woaaaaah Holy fuck I took way too much holy shit wooooooooooooooah I'm tripping the fuck out I'm drowning holy fuck

!HEAVY DOSE!

Uhhhhhhh
hhhhhhhhh
WWWWWFUCKINGH

!MEGA DOSE!

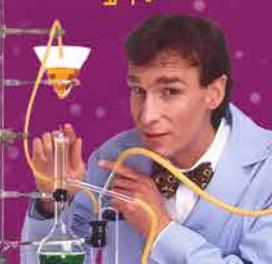

10.

A WHORE THE DRAGON IS BACK

!MEGA DOSE!

13.

Some scientists think that LSD could be an antidepressant! While there isn't any definitive proof that it is effective, scientists continue to see if it will work. How do we find out? By experimenting, of course! I experiment all the time! Every day! Maybe one day one of you young scientists will discover something groundbreaking! My ex-wife won't be that person, now that she's dating my douche brother!

!ULTRA MEGA DOSE!

Now go out and face the world, young scientists!

HOROSCOPES

4 Kids!

ARIES

The stars are aligned in your favor, young one.
Wait. Wait one second. Okay that's better.
Just some dust in the old telescope.
Okay so the stars are aligned- oh that's not good.
I'd give you about two weeks.
Better call your priest. Or don't. What do I care?

LEO

The sign of the lion. Even for the short little punk that you are, you're brave. A good thing, too, because you're going to die a horrible slow death. You know how your slobbery little nose is always running? Well, it's actually a deadly mutation of Juvenile Idiopathic Arthritis. But, hey, keep your chin up, my brave little lion.

LIBRA

You're a practical sign. Always looking for the simplest explanation and never taking anyone's baloney. I respect that; so I'm-gonna give it to you straight. You're gonna die tomorrow. Sorry.

AQUARIUS

Your talents lie in musical talent, creativity, and perfect pitch. When you sing, grown men weep. Which reminds me of a song. Maybe you've heard it: It's called "Only the Good Die Young." Yeah, well, it's about you.

TAURUS

Ahh Taurus, the lucky one.

Your horoscope, the symbol of hope, joy and doughnuts. What a lucky sign to be born under, young chap! Unfortunately, you were conceived (A.K.A. your parents had a little sleepover) under the sign of Leo. So by the transitive property of horoscopes, imminent doom awaits your every step.

GEMINI!

The sign of the twins! My favorite sign! I'm actually a Gemini myself, kids. A shame too, because it looks like the stars spell out certain death. That's D-E-A-T-H kids. For us.

CANCER

Need I say more?

SCORPIO

Cancer again.

SAGITTARIUS

See horoscope for Scorpio.

VIRGO

Nope! Not looking good for you this week. You're going to die soon. The lunar eclipse of Titan suggests it will be a car accident, but the alignment of Neptune foretells something involving a choking hazard and someone neglecting to adhere to the "Small parts. Not appropriate for children" warning. Chew carefully and wear your seatbelt, kid.

CAPRICORN

Fortuitous stellar events forsooth a very lucky week for you, pal! Now's the time to live without abandon. Stay up past your bedtime! Go skydiving! Live dangerously!**

PISCES

Look, I don't know if you read all the other ones or not. Maybe you're a self-centered little brat who only reads her own horoscope. Go read them. I'll wait. Do you get it now? We're all going to die!!!! Death, doom and destruction!! The end is nigh!!

Explaining Israel and Palestine to Children

By Thomas Aquinas

Okay everyone, take a seat in the reading circle. It's time to learn about the fascinating subject of geography. You may have heard from one of your more politically conscious little friends about the swirling storm of chaos ravaging the terrifying desert separating Europe and Asia. Perhaps you have even been privy to a first-hand account of the hellish nightmare spanning decades of war fueled by the violent clash of two immutable religious claims to sovereignty over the region surrounding the Holy Land, further disarranged by the atrocities of the Second World War, the political turmoil of the Palestinian government, and the oppressive occupation of Gaza and the West Bank.

Oh, excuse me, I got a bit carried away. Well, let's move on. For the rest of you, we'll begin with a brief overview of the geography of the region. At the center we have the city of Jerusalem, home to some of the most important events in all three major Abrahamic religions. The city is surrounded on all sides by a thousand miles of dry, uninhabitable desert wasteland. Despite this, around 13 million very persistent people live in the combined area of Israel and Palestine. When Israel was first resurrected after the end of WWII, every country within earshot promised to work together to obliterate it, but somehow, the Israelis found the motivation to defend their last remaining scrap of land on this Earth, and they emerged victorious over the far weaker, non-UN backed Arabic military forces. But one country, coincidentally located in the exact spot Israel now occupied, sustained its absolute opposition to the Zionist movement and to any compromise that failed to secure the entire territory to its rightful, Palestinian owners, resulting in a relentless barrage of missile strikes that has claimed many thousands of innocent lives and irrevocably altered countless more.

Stop crying Sarah. Learning is fun. Anyway, half a century later, the conflict has yet to be resolved, and prospects of a peaceful solution emerging from current negotiations are grim. But don't lose hope, little ones! If there's one thing we can count in this attempt to coax two radically different religious regimes rooted in oppression and lost identity into coexistence in a war-torn desert, it's pragmatism. Oh, that's the bell. Time for recess.

ANIMAL SUPERPOWERS: THE DUCK'S SPIRALING SURPRISE!

BY DR. RICHARD DICKINSON

ANIMALS HAVE TO SURVIVE IN A HARSH ENVIRONMENT, SO, THROUGH THE PROCESS OF EVOLUTION, MANY SPECIES DEVELOP "SUPERPOWERS" THAT ALLOW THEM TO SURVIVE. OVER THE PAST FEW WEEKS, WE'VE LOOKED AT SOME ANIMAL SUPERPOWERS, LIKE THE SPEED OF A CHEETAH, THE IMMENSE STRENGTH OF A ELEPHANT, AND THE TEETH OF A SHARK. THIS WEEK, HOWEVER, WE ARE GOING TO BE TALKING ABOUT AN ANIMAL WITH AN UNUSUAL SUPERPOWER: THE DUCK.

SOME OF THE DUCK'S REGULAR POWERS ARE KNOWN TO MOST PEOPLE, NAMELY FLYING AND SWIMMING. MOST BIRDS CAN FLY, WHICH IS NECESSARY TO ESCAPE FROM PREDATORS. DUCKS CAN ALSO SWIM IN THE WATER, WHICH THEY DO FOR FEEDING, AND NOT JUST ON PIECES OF BREAD WE THROW IN THE WATER FOR THEM! IN ADDITION TO SWIMMING, DUCKS CAN ALSO DIVE UNDER THE WATER TO SEARCH FOR THE REALLY, REALLY GOOD FOOD. WHAT MAKES THIS SO EXTRAORDINARY IS THAT THEY HAVE FEATHERS THAT ARE WATERPROOF! MOST BIRDS CAN'T FLY WHEN THEY ARE WET BECAUSE THEIR FEATHERS BECOME RUMPLED. THE DUCKS, HOWEVER, HAVE FEATHERS THAT ALLOW THEM TO FLY EVEN WHEN THEY ARE WET! THIS ALSO REQUIRES A GREAT DEAL OF WING STRENGTH, WHICH DUCKS ALSO POSSESS!

THIS IS NOT SO SPECIAL, THOUGH: MANY BIRDS CAN GO IN THE WATER AND IN THE AIR. HOWEVER, DUCKS HAVE ONE SUPERPOWER THAT NO OTHER ANIMAL DISCOVERED HAS! AND BELIEVE ME, I'VE WORKED WITH A LOT OF ACCOMPLISHED SCIENTISTS WHO HAVE SPENT YEARS TRYING TO FIGURE OUT IF ANY OTHER ANIMAL HAS THIS SUPERPOWER. THIS MIGHT APPEAR REALLY SCREWY AT FIRST, BUT THE DUCK'S INCREDIBLE SUPERPOWER IS ITS CORKSCREW-SHAPED PENIS! FOR THOSE OF YOU THAT DON'T KNOW, I WILL EXPLAIN AS THE WORLD'S PREMIER ANIMAL PENIS EXPERT: THE USUAL PENIS OF THE ANIMAL KINGDOM IS THE 'RED-ROCKET', WHICH IS SELF-EXPLANATORY. YOU SEE, WHEN A MALE IS AROUSED AND WANTS TO HAVE SEX, BLOOD IS PUMPED RAPIDLY INTO THE PENIS AND THE PENIS BECOMES ERECT AT A ROCKET-LIKE RATE, WHICH IS THE EXPLANATION OF THE NAME 'RED ROCKET.' IF I WERE TO DESCRIBE THE NAME OF THE DUCK'S PENIS, I WOULD USE THE TERM 'RED CORKSCREW' BECAUSE, UNLIKE MOST PENISES, IT IS SHAPED LIKE A LARGE, BEAUTIFUL SPIRAL STAIRCASE. FOR THOSE OF YOU THAT CAN'T PICTURE WHAT IT LOOKS LIKE, SIMPLY GOOGLE "DUCK'S PENIS" (WITH A PARENTS' PERMISSION!). I WOULD RECOMMEND THE 27TH IMAGE DOWN ON THE 6TH COLUMN-IT IS ESPECIALLY INFORMATIVE AS TO WHAT A DUCK'S PENIS LOOKS LIKE AND HOW IT WORKS.

NOW, YOU MAY BE ASKING YOURSELF: WHY DOES THE DUCK HAVE SUCH A COOL, SPRING-LIKE PENIS? GOOD QUESTION! THE PENIS, WHILE ALSO NECESSARY FOR PEEING, IS USED BY THE MALE DURING THE ACT OF SEX. SEX, FOR THOSE OF YOU WHO DON'T KNOW, IS SOMETHING THAT YOU CAN EASILY FIND VIDEOS OF ON THE INTERNET (WITH PARENTS' PERMISSION!). EVERY ANIMAL NEEDS TO HAVE SEX IN ORDER TO HAVE CHILDREN (LIKE YOU!) SO THEIR SPECIES CAN SURVIVE. THIS MEANS THAT THE PENIS IS A VERY IMPORTANT TOOL FOR ALL ANIMALS TO HAVE. THE HUMAN PENIS WORKS FOR US BECAUSE THE HUMAN VAGINA IS LIKE A BEAUTIFUL CAVE, SO WE CAN GO IN IT EASILY. HOWEVER, THE DUCK VAGINA HAS ALWAYS BEEN SHAPED LIKE A CORKSCREW, WHICH HAPPENS TO PREVENT MALE DUCKS FROM RAPING THEM. (DON'T LOOK UP RAPE, KIDS.) THE MALE DUCK HAD TO FIND OUT A WAY TO CONTINUE TO REPRODUCE, SO IT DEVELOPED A SUPERPOWER, LIKE BATMAN BUYING A LOT OF GADGETS OR SPIDERMAN TRAINING BY DELIVERING PIZZAS. THE DUCK'S PENIS ADAPTED TO BECOME SHAPED LIKE A CORKSCREW, AND, TODAY, IT USES ITS SUPERPOWER TO URINATE AND HAVE SEX WITH FEMALE DUCKS!

HOPE YOU LEARNED SOMETHING ABOUT DUCKS! NEXT WEEK, WE'LL TALK ABOUT THE SUPERPOWER OF THE CLOWNFISH!

Crossing the 38th Parallel for Kids

By Alex Johnson

Hope you've been practicing your jump rope skills!
Today we're learning how to
HOP the North Korean border!

Preparation

The first step you're going to want to take is contacting your local human smugglers. Luckily, with your scrawny frame and small size they should be able to get you into China easily! Expected to get right into South Korea? Hold your horses! The title of this article may be a bit of a misnomer<sup>1</sup>, but it would be impossible to cross the 38th parallel itself without being shot up by the North Korean border control. It's going to be a few months before they can take you over to the People's Republic, let alone into Seoul. During the next few months, you're going to have to keep the fact that you're leaving a secret from everyone, like when you farted on your brother's pillowcase and accidentally gave him pink eye.

Adjusting

Becoming an orphan will put a damper on anyone's week, but the guilt of leaving your family behind while you seek a better life is a real bummer! You may not see them for ten or more years, but if you got out, you sure as hell can get back in! Unfortunately, North Korea has a sort of "no-take-backsies" policy, and they'd probably only accept you as a political prisoner. But, if you want to avoid the modern day gulags, you can sneak back in the same way you came out, with your old friend the human smuggler! If you are out for good, it's also a smart idea to lock your lips about the regime. Known outspoken defectors have been put on a "target list" and are sought after by the government. If you want to go public, we suggest creating a new identity, and concealing your face and given name.

Heading Out

When the special day arrives, it's important to slip out of the country silently, without arousing suspicion of the authorities. One fun idea is to leave during the night, to avoid running into anyone on your way out. You probably don't want to have to make small talk about your attempted treason; how awkward!

Your first stop out of the border will be a country like China, but there you'll still be considered an illegal migrant<sup>2</sup>. Next step, get working on your resume, because you'll have to find a source of income to prepare yourself to eventually move to South Korea, where you'll be taken as a refugee.

Well, that's all we have for the process. It can seem grueling at times, but the most important thing about defecting from the country you were born in is to have fun with it!

TNR

<sup>1</sup>Misnomer: A wrong or incorrect use of a term

QUICK TIPS! Police Brutality For Kids

By Claudia Hurtado and Sanya Mittal

Police brutality is a very complicated subject, but essentially it means that sometimes cops hit innocent people for no reason, but typically the reason is they are brown because Trump says brown people are dangerous and everyone knows he only tells us facts and that's why your uncle voted for him. Cops don't always just hit these people: they sometimes use their guns. Now remember, cops have real guns not Nerf guns and if you get shot by one you don't get out, you go to Heaven. In case you didn't know, Heaven is the place your dog went to when Mommy ran over him with the car - wait I mean when he got too old and had to go live on the special farm even though he was only one year old and his breed of dogs typically live to be ten. After cops brutally kill innocent kids, they usually lie and say they had a weapon and were threatened but that's a lie and you can tell because their pants are usually on fire.

The Candy Economy

By Cameron Clark

January 3, 1955

New York City, New York (AKA The Big League Chew Sour Apple Flavor)

For Timothy, selling things was elementary. For nearly half of his entire life, he'd worked from 7AM to 3PM as a salesman for the only thing that mattered. Today was no exception. After a long commute on public transportation to the workplace, he'd started off the day strong, selling 130% of his normal volume, his sales peaking around lunch time, just before most of his coworkers and clients took their break. Unfortunately, Tim found himself sitting in the boss-man's office during his break; that is, the principal's office.

You see, Timmy was a shark - the best in his field at Washington Elementary on 34th and 2nd.

He had it all: Coca-Cola, Charleston Chew, even Kit Kat on a good day. He'd been in the business for years, about five, to be exact. Whenever a kid wanted something sweet instead of the usual slop they had in the cafeteria, they came to Timmy Twizzler: the best candy salesman that the fifth grade had ever seen! Unfortunately, today Principal Bahrakli had had enough.

"You little brat!" he shouted, "Do you have any idea how much profit we lose from your little business?!"

Timmy did not know. Timmy also did not care. "Your 'business' tastes like doodie!" he retorted, bravely facing the disgusting Mr. Bahrakli who tormented the kids with 'the food pyramid' and 'balanced meals.' Pah, as if any self-respecting elementary-schooler would ever be seen with anything green on their lunch tray.

"You must stop this at once! We've dealt with it since you were in kindergarten, and I've had enough! Don't make me call your parents!" Bahrakli screamed, startling the children from recess who had gathered outside the office windows. "If I see you selling anything sweet in this school ever again, you'll be expelled!"

For the first time, Timmy showed a hint of fear in his eyes, though he did not feel any. "No! Please! I'll stop!" he pleaded, through a façade of giving-a-fuck.

"That's what I thought! Now give up all your candy and you can go to recess!"

And Timmy did. He gave Principal Bahrakli every last Snickers, M&M, Skittle, Pepsi-Cola, and Twizzler that he had. The only thing he kept was a single caramel apple.

The very next morning, when the time came for morning announcements, it was noticed that Principal Bahrakli hadn't been seen in his office yet, nor had Timmy been seen in the classroom. Rumors began to spread almost immediately - had Timmy been expelled? Had Bahrakli finally retired? In either case, why were both of them missing? It wasn't until first grader Sal Rigatoni returned from the bathroom that any of those questions were answered.

"So, I walked into the potty, and I heard someone in there and it sounded like they weren't exactly doing real good, so I opened up the potty and then I seen him on the potty, all tied up." Said Jacob. "Mr. Bahrakli was there on the seat and he had, umm, Twizzlers tied around his arms, and root beer poured all over his face, hehe, and he had, umm, an apple in his mouth, and it was covered in caramel, and there were twizzlers all around him and he was sticked to the potty. I taked the apple out of his mouth and he said Timmy did it, but I haven't seen Timmy since yesterday."

And Jacob didn't see Timmy the next day either, or the day after that, or ever again, and neither did anybody else, but everyone knew what had happened. That very same morning, Principal Bahrakli retired out of embarrassment, and he was never seen again either. But Timmy's legacy lives on today at Washington Elementary, where both happiness and obesity ratings top the nation's charts.

History Explained!

The Eugenics Movement

By Nicholas Goebbels

genics movement. This could perhaps be because that some of the issues are too difficult for many people to talk about, or perhaps people don't want people finding out all about the movement, for fear that America could learn from the great thinkers of history. Here's what you need to know about the Eugenics movement!

The Eugenics Movement began in America in the late 1800s, and was one of the few movements that united the country. The Eugenics movement called for sterilization of those who weren't considered intellectual. This, according to the Eugenics movement, would result in a smarter, more effective human race. And they are onto something! You might be thinking, "Hang on a second-isn't this what the Nazis thought?" Well, shut up. It's nothing like the Nazis. Not at all. Shut up. Many intelligent people at the time supported the Eugenics, including Harvard Graduate and sociologist W.E.B DuBois, feminist and advocate for contraception, which includes condoms, Margaret Sanger, and other ridiculously smart people who are way smarter than you, so shut up about Nazis. Okay? I've heard it before. It's nothing like Nazis. All the kind Eugenics wanted to do was to create a stronger human race via sterilization. We weren't even hurting the weak people! Making sure they don't reproduce isn't a crime, and it's certainly nothing like what the Nazis were doing. I don't know why you keep thinking that. The Nazis were killing people, and we were just saying that they couldn't reproduce. Apples and oranges kids, apples and oranges.

Anyway, the Eugenics movement slowed down in the 1940s. Not because people lost support for it. That was definitely not the reason. As usual, the Nazis played a part in the downfall of something magnificent. I would like to clarify that, once again, Eugenic supporters are NOT Nazis. What we call ourselves is almost completely different. When Nazis were doing their thing in the 1940s, Americans decided that, for some reason, they didn't want to be like the Nazis. Who knows why-I, for one, certainly don't. This meant that all of the smart, intelligent people that once whole-heartedly supported Eugenics decided that they would change their tune on a dime, and decide to fall victim to government propaganda saying that Eugenics was bad. This was just one example of the poor education that children received, as well as the beginnings of the tragic cold war. Some people who have read literature have tried to revive it, but to no avail. You can help the cause, kids. Find someone you know who you're not too keen about, and render him unable to produce children. So what if it's Nazi-like? That judgement won't matter when you help create a masterful race: the human race.

Around 100 years ago was an amazing time for the United States of America: we had just won World War I, women had earned the right to vote, and the Roaring 20s were just around the corner. One other event that was going on during this time that no one seems to talk about: the Eu-

How To Become A Loan Shark For Kids

By Claudia Hurtado and Sanya Mittal

You may have seen them in movies or heard about them from your friend who lives in Chinatown. Ever wanted to be one? Becoming a loan shark is not as hard as it sounds and it can actually be a lot of fun. First things first, you have to find some friends, preferably some of the bigger kids in school. You know the ones who keep talking about puberty as if that means something and are a foot and a half taller than everyone else? The ones who play football? Those are the marks to go for.

Next, you and your “friends” should take over an important part of the park, like the swing set, and make it so only you can use it. Your friends’ job is to make sure no one gets close. This is going to make all the other kids scared of you. Make sure when your friends are turning people away they say things like “you need an appointment with the boss” or “the boss is busy right now.” This will make kids wonder why you are the boss and they will probably try everything to ask you if they can swing. Whenever they do, always talk about how you give people what they need when they need it, then tell them to try again tomorrow.

Now this is a good answer, because it’s not a full lie and Mom always says lying is a sin. Whenever the kids at the park ask you for things, like crayons, toys, or heroin from that one guy, give it to them for free and then the next week, demand payment and extra because you did them a favor. And if they refuse, have your special large friends teach them a lesson. They will only have to do that a few times before everyone understands what happens if they don’t pay you back.

And that's all it takes to become the best loan shark at the park!

KOOL KIDZ GAMING CORNER: OVERWATCH REVIEW

BY STEVEN ABRAMOWITZ

'Sup, gamers??? Welcome to the new, freshly focus-group-tested TNR Kool Kidz Gaming Corner! We're here to keep you caught up with the hottest brand new video games, like 2016's Overwatch! In this sci-fi shooter, you can pick one of 26 zany heroes and fight the enemy team over the map objective! But is it on fleek, or totally bogus? Here's our exclusive first look at the brand-new game. (Overwatch is rated T for teen by the ESRB, make sure you're 13 years or older or have your parents' permission before you purchase.)

The first thing we noticed about Overbotch was its totally awesome graphics! The visuals are lit AF. Visual effects are great to watch play out on the screen - they're flashy enough that no matter how badly you whiff your abilities, you can feel like you've accomplished something cool. It's the perfect instant gratification for us kids! Maps and characters are vibrant and recognizable so you can tell from a mile away who's eliminating you and how much nicer their cosmetics are than yours. Remember, cosmetics make you better at the game, so grab Dad's credit card and get those loot boxes! (Disclaimer: legal has informed us that we'll get sued if we encourage kids to buy loot boxes. You should only acquire loot boxes through usual play, unless you have a parent's permission to gamble with their money.)

Once you pick your jaw off the floor from seeing Olderblotch's visuals, it's simple to click "Quick Play" and get into a game! The long list of heroes can look intimidating, but it's easy to pick up! Of the diverse, multi-cultural cast of heroes, pick the one you find most relatable! For our first game, we went with D.Va because she is like, so us! She's an awesome gamer girl who takes kawaii selfies and loves hilarious memes! She uses her 1337 gamer skills to excel in the military, just like we could! Look out ISIS, you'd get no-scoped if the army would just give me a sniper rifle! Anyway, Ogrecrotch plays like a smooth, fast, and fun team shooter! You get an elimination for doing any amount of damage to an enemy who gets taken down, so we felt accomplished no matter how badly we were actually doing! You can't even see your teammates' or enemies' scores, so no one can flame you for being garbage! Never before has a video game so perfectly addressed our desire to pay money for a sense of accomplishment. The game is outfitted with a filter that prevents people from talking trash, but we found it to be imperfect as others' hurtful words still got through. It's okay, though; we just dabbed on the haters and moved on to the next game.

So, what's the verdict on Watchover? It's super legit, yo. On a scale from one to ten, we rank it as totally "on fleek." Put those fidget spinners on hold, because we think Overwatch is going to get big, fast. Get it now while it's new and fresh! Well, gamers, that's all the TNR Kool Kidz Game Corner has for now. Hit us up next week for a special behind-the-scenes look at the upcoming Emoji Movie video game! And in the meantime, check out our website for all the sick game news! (Ask parents' permission before going online)

SUPER LEGIT, YO!

→ On a scale from totally bogus to 7, we give Overwatch a 7.5! Get the fire extinguisher, 'cause this thing is litty AF!

THE WAR ON TOPLESS BABES:

Parents sue Huggies, find baby nipples on packaging to be “too revealing”, “bordline child pornography”

By Kylie Murayama

Controversy has taken over the baby diaper industry as a particularly angry group of suburban mothers have decided to sue popular diaper brand Huggies over their “inappropriate packaging”, citing the blatant display of infant nipples on products. Throughout the country, these moms are finally speaking up against what many apparently consider “borderline child pornography”.

Linda, mother of three, was interviewed on her opinion of this recent controversy, stating, “I can’t believe that they’ve gotten away with this for so long, clearly these babies are underage and just putting their nipples out there on display is basically nudity!”

Linda, alongside other neighborhood mothers, has brought this issue into the public eye. “What if my babies’ saw that?” inquired Linda to reporters, “Next thing you know they’d be smoking the marijuana weed with their punk friends skipping school!” Linda is currently homeschooled her three-year-old triplets, claiming that it is never too early for them to start studying for those SATs. You go, Linda!

Linda’s next door neighbor, Molly, is also a member of this movement, however, her motivation is not as strong as Linda’s. “I didn’t know how serious Linda was about this,” said Molly, “I was just so happy that Linda was finally reaching out to the community. She’s always outside walking her kids and mumbling about how incompetent the neighborhood watch is, but I’ve never actually talked to her before this. I know Linda is a stay-at-home mother, since her husband, Richard, works on Wall Street. I think she’s just lonely, her husband is always at work, and whenever he’s home, all he does is golf at the country club.” When asked why she joined the movement, Molly replied, “I thought it was one of those “roleplaying” things the kids are into these days, I wanted my kids to think I was “cool” and “hip” so they wouldn’t be embarrassed of me all the time.”

When asked about the controversy, Huggies PR department had this to say: “We stand by our decision to leave the packaging design as-is. We have been putting babies like these on the Huggies diapers for years, and it is as much of a part of our company as the diapers we put on the models (con’t).”

“Anyway, to whom it may concern (Linda) maybe you should stop sexualizing babies (Linda).” After a PR representative asked that last comment to be omitted, he stated, “That was my personal opinion, it is not relevant to the company’s stance on this issue, and I don’t want my personal opinion to be misconstrued and add more fire to the flame.” However, we have decided to include it anyway, because we love to report drama, and this could definitely start some.

No other diaper brand has made any official statement, though Huggies PR told us that they expected their “diaper brothers” (their words not ours) to stand by them in this time of scandal. However, many baby-owners noticed other brands like Luvs and Pampers had taken their products out of circulation and replaced them with almost generic-brand looking packaging design and a noticeable lack of baby nipples. Gerber, while not a diaper producer is still an influencer in the baby-related industry, issued a press release stating, “We saw this coming. Why do you think we only use the baby’s head on all of our products?”

Oddly enough, lingerie giant Victoria’s Secret also commented on the controversy, stating, “We really support Huggie’s decision. They shouldn’t be demonized for this, and the babies have a right to express themselves however they please. If that means that they want to be half naked on diaper packaging, then so be it. Nipple censorship needs to be challenged, and this movement is a step in the wrong direction.” The Victoria’s Secret spokesperson then proceeded to make a hashtag symbol with their fingers and proudly stated, “Hashtag free the nips!”

No news has emerged yet from the legal side of this issue, though Linda hopes that her lawyers see what an issue this is and proceeds to file a Summons and Complaint. “I wish they could be charged with distribution of child pornography,” said Linda, “but the government hasn’t evolved to that level of understanding yet. They aren’t ready.”

The government might not be ready to see this to justice, but Linda sure is.

The Birds and the Bees

By William Unterkoefler

Maybe your older brother mentioned it once. Maybe your parents mentioned something they shouldn't have and hushed your questioning with "It's the birds and the bees." Maybe someone told you once, "You'll understand when you're older." How patronizing! (Vocab corner: if you're not old enough to know what "patronizing" means, it's when adults talk to children as if they won't understand anything (Vocab corner: if you don't know what "understand" means, it's when you know what something means)) But now, the time has come! The wait is finally over. Read on to learn what the "birds and the bees" really means. It's everything your big sister wouldn't tell you and more!

Birds are members of the Animal Kingdom, in the Vertebrate Subphylum, which means they have backbones, just like you, me, and your pet lizard, but not your regional congressmen. Remember kids, voting is important. Most birds have strong wings and light, hollow bones that allow them to fly. But not all birds can fly. Penguins, emus, and ostriches are all notable exceptions! And everything that flies is not necessarily a bird. Bats, bees, flies and airplanes can all fly, but none of them are birds! Birds live all over the world and have a wide variety of diets, but most eat a variety of fruits and nuts. Some birds make great pets too!

Bees, on the other hand, are a group of insects. Scientists call them by their Latin name Anthophila. Bees have six legs, like all insects, and can fly. There are many different types of bees, from killer bees to friendly bumblebees. Bees are essential to our ecosystems and environment because they help pollinate flowers. Fun fact: bumblebees flap their wings more than 200 times per second! That's fast! Scientists have listed bees as an endangered species, so be sure not to harm any unless they're buzzing next to your head because then they're just asking to go extinct.

Since birds and bees are both animals, they both reproduce. Both do so by [Warning: Explicit Content: Must be 18 or older to view] and then the male bird puts his [Warning: Explicit Content: Must be 18 or older to view] into the [Warning: Explicit Content: Must be 18 or older to view].

FANTASTIC NOSES

AND HOW TO PICK THEM

BY DAVID SPINNARD

On every schoolyard, there are a couple of persisting archetypes; there's the kickballers, the gossips, the taggers, and finally, the nose-pickers. Ah, how they stand alone on the playground with a nose full of miscellaneous, sometimes fearfully dangerous objects. It's a solemn, but noble lifestyle where they quite literally push the boundaries of cognitive science. The motivations for nose picking change with age. Kindergarten-ers seem to focus on the scientific aspect more than anything. Frequent nose-picker and Kindergartener Angeline Cossacks says her actions are guided by the mysteries of the universe: she "just wants to see how far up stuff can go." While some do it for the science, others do it for the sheer thrill. Seven-year-old and first grader Johnny Henderson picks his nose due to the "insane rush I feel." He continues, "Out of everything I've ever stuck up my nose, I think the sharpies are my favorite." Johnny found his secret sauce, and Angeline wants to unlock the laws of nature. Nose picking has so many applications, yet most people haven't even tried. And that's a shame. Anyone can be an expert excavator, you just have to follow the right steps: these right steps. Welcome to nose-picking boot-camp.

Step One. We have to answer: why are you picking your nose? Kids, you gotta pick with passion. You have to dig down before you can dig up. Channel that inner ball of snot and dirty fingernails. You have to want to pick because Cindy pushed you over on the mulch. Pick because you stubbed your toe on your school desk. Pick because of that time where you ate a pound of sand and your parents were baffled at why you were hospitalized. Pick because your parents' unpaid, pediatric medical bills made them spit and claw at each other. Pick because when mommy picks you up from school, her lipstick and hair are all messed up. Pick because dad never came back from his business trip. Find something.

Next, you gotta get limber. You can't just begin sticking things up your nose without preparation. Stretch out those face muscles- really make some awful, awful faces that would even scar your Vietnam war-torn Grandpa Jack who watches the moon landing all day while simultaneously counting every other digit of pi. If you can fuck him up then you're golden, kid. Now, with nose prepped you can begin practice. Before various objects can dig into your cranium, you have to have a control group. Lucky, you have ten of them. Begin with your finger. Its rounded, tactile edges and the fact that's its literally a part of your body means it's perfect for beginners. Now pick. Really, really dig up in there. Feel from the ends to the edges. Get acquainted with yourself. Once you've identified the spatial parameters of your booger hole, you are ready for the objects.

Picking a nose-picking object is a sacred trial. Only the most experienced of excavators have narrowed down the perfect utensils, and this guide can give you a head start. We are looking for something that screams "gentle brain damage." A finger can do in a pinch, but most people want something more substantial. Raiding the school-utensil drawer in your kitchen is a good start. Something long and thin like a pencil or marker can do well, but the holy grail is a crayon. A crayon's waxy texture means that it can actually be lodged into your nose, a nose-picking pinnacle. Its thin, but also relatively short shape means it's perfect for two in one nostril. That's what we in the business call double penetration, and if there's two in each nostril it's a quadruple load. Don't get too ahead of yourself though, start with one in the hole. After that, the rest of the exploration is up to you! Just remember to 1. Find yourself. 2. Limber up. 3. Practice. and 4. pick your picker of choice and commit. Now go forth and conquer the unknown.

Dear Advice Guy,

My parents have been yelling at each other a lot recently. Some of my friends said that's what their parents did right before they got divorced. I don't want them to get divorced. Is there anything I can do to get them to stop fighting?

Sincerely,
Joey Hannigan
First Grader

Dear Joey,

Hearing your parents fight can be really hard and I completely understand why you would want it to stop. I'm sorry to say that sometimes your mommy and daddy just aren't meant to be together and they would be happier apart. That being said, I'll do my best to help you fix their relationship!

First of all, you need to accept that it's your fault. That's right, your parents are unhappy because of you. Do you think they fought like this before you were born? No. They were happy! They used to laugh and dance and go on spontaneous trips to Nova Scotia where they lie on the beach. The cool breeze would normally make them feel uncomfortable, but none of that mattered because they were so in love. They would get lost in each other's eyes and every moment together would feel like years. And now you're around, weighing them down and making everyone feel suffocated by their mediocre lives. I know this is hard to hear, but the sooner you accept that you're the root of your parents problems, the easier it will be to fix them.

Next you should put yourself in extreme danger. The closer to death the better. You could swallow a bunch of pills or stick a fork in the electrical socket, but I'm just spitballing. You see, if your parents see their offspring in a perilous situation, they'll put aside their differences to help you. It's their evolutionary nature! Either that or they won't care and they'll be happier without you. Win-win.

Lastly, Joey, you need to get your parents to have sex. And no, I don't mean when they "tickle each other under the covers" or whatever you've rationalized their behavior to be. I mean a good ol' fashioned boning, making the beast with two backs, churning some homemade butter. The way they used to on the beaches of Nova Scotia, when you were conceived. The way they did before you ruined their lives. There are several ways you could do this but here's what I suggest:

1. Draw a warm bubble bath with rose petals
2. Put on a Barry White Album
3. Leave some lube on the nightstand

Believe me, this plan is genius. Each of your parents will think the other one did it and their love will be rekindled. Now here's the most important part: in order to make sure they actually have sex, you're going to want to hide under the bed. You may be scared for life but, hey, at least your parents are happy. On the other hand, if the plan doesn't work then that's the perfect time to get in the bath with a plugged-in hair dryer.

Best wishes,

Advice Guy!

With Kid Experts Benjamin Harrold and Daniel Carr

Dear Advice Guy,

My friend is really quiet, but in the last few days he's been quieter than usual. Lately, he's been saying things like "They will pay for what they've done" and "Their blood will cleanse my sins." He tells me that I can't tell anyone what he's been saying, especially not teachers, his parents, or the police. What should I do?

From,
Terrified Timmy

Hi Timmy,

It sounds like your friend is motivated, doesn't it? Your friend is what most people would call a school shooter, which means that he plans to shoot many people at school. The date which he chooses to do such a heinous crime will likely be a date of significance to him, so maybe the birthday of his abusive parent or a day when a terrorist was born or maybe whenever he feels like it. The way I see it, there are two possible paths for you. You can either remain his friend, or you can turn against him.

In my life, I've been on both sides of this coin: both enemy and friend. They both have their pros and cons. As a friend, you're definitely safer. If you're lucky, you won't even have to be in the school—I've gotten my fair share of texts telling me to avoid school on a certain day, and I've probably had my skin saved a few times for feigning illnesses. You get to avoid the massacre and, because you weren't at school, you don't have to deal with the awkward situation of trying to talk your friend out of a suicide. However, you may become an outcast at school. Why? First of all, you missed the day of the shooting, so you don't have the chance to bond over that with anyone. Secondly, you don't have nearly as much fun sitting at home than at the middle of the school. As an enemy, however, you have a lot more fun. You get to try to survive for a day, which is the greatest adrenaline rush known to the human race. Unlike the others, you will already know the shooter, giving you both an advantage in survival. This will encourage the unprepared to follow your lead, which will give you a power that very few will ever get to wield. If you can get them out alive, you'll never have to buy a drink for the rest of your life. This brings us to the only problem with turning against your friend: he may kill you. While you know him well, he knows you just as well, and will attack all of your vulnerabilities. While death could make you a martyr, it also will end your entire existence. If you're lucky, you could survive with an injury, but that could suck for a bit.

Best of luck Timmy,
Advice Guy
